Description:

More Indian students are going to the US for higher education than ever before. In 2001, nearly 50,000 students went to the US, a record year, when India beat China as the #1 place of origin for international students. In 2015, more than 1,35,000 Indian students left to go to the US. This explosion in foreign student admissions is happening at a time when US tuition costs are at a record high; internship and jobs are tougher to find because of intense competition, even as visa rules get more complicated.

In this seminar, you will learn why going to the US to study is still an excellent option. You will learn about various problems that international students get into and how to avoid the many costly and common mistakes during the admissions process. It matters what you study, where you study, how you finalize your application package and how you plan for a successful career in the United States.
